Speaking for the resolution. Senator Jones, of Washington, declared that if an amendment were not submitted to the people nation-wide prohibition soon would become a party issue. Senators Thompson and Sherman were among others who supported the measure.

Senator Sheppard, author of the resolution, accepted an amendment by Senator Harding providing that the proposed constitutional amendment must be submitted to the states for ratification by July 1, 1923. Announcement was made by Senator Stone that he would propose that before prohibition goes into effect the government compensate property resulting from its enforcement. Senator Harding's proposals were accepted he would vote for the submitted to the states for general and statement to-night.

Senator Lodge told the Senate that he believed adoption of the amendment would be "the worst thing that could be done to advance temperance."

"I hold very strong and conscientious convictions on this subject," said the Marsachusetts Senator. "I believe that practically complete abstinence may be brought about when a large majority of the people are convinced that it is wise and that it is for their benefit mentally, morally and physically. I am aware that this will take time and the steady growth of public sentiment. Without a prepared public sentiment among at least a majority of the people such legislation as this is certain to fail."
